

JUDGE JAMES SAYS THE DEMOCRATS ARE TRYING TO BUY VOTES

Says Efforts Being Made To Club Those Dependent On State to Vote Democratic

RECEIVES LETTERS

Communications Tell How People Are Being Forced Between Vote or Food

TOWANDA, Pa., Sept. 21—Openly charging the Democratic organization with using "public funds," to buy the State-wide election, Superior Court Judge Arthur H. James, addressed large meetings last night.

In a forceful address before several thousand Bradford county voters who jammed the county court-house, the Republican nominee for governor accused the Democratic State "bosses" of trying to club those who are in any way dependent upon the State into registering and voting for continuance of the political machine which the Little New Dealers have set up.

"The people of Pennsylvania," he said, "paid an extremely high tax bill and took it with a smile because they thought they were providing for their friends and neighbors who were destitute."

"Now the Administration is threatening to hold up those funds until the recipients are starved into voting for the Democratic ticket."

"It is the first time in the history of Pennsylvania a political party takes public money to buy the election."

Not only do the Democrats demand that the "unfortunate" register "right," the jurist said, but they refuse to give them WPA jobs unless they follow the dictates of the New Deal political machine.

"Yet," added Judge James, "they say they are liberal and progressive. If it's progressive to take public money to buy an election then I don't want to be a liberal."

"Letters come to me from mothers and fathers who describe how they are being forced to take their choice between giving up their vote or giving up food and shelter for their children," he said.

The War Situation

By H. R. Knickerbocker (Copyright)

PRAGUE, Sept. 21—The cabinet of President Benes early today decided to capitulate to Nazi Germany after a night of debate, but reconvened this afternoon to reconsider the possibility of new resistances.

A Czech army revolt aimed at establishing a military dictatorship for the purpose of fighting Chancellor Hitler was a last minute danger feverishly discussed. Following the cabinet's initial decision, a note announcing Czech acceptance of the Anglo-French partition proposal was drafted for dispatch to London and Paris. In the meantime, leaders of the various parliamentary parties were called in to sanction the decision, and long delays were encountered.

The loss of time in making a public announcement of the cabinet's decision led to a rumor in well informed sources that the ministry itself had split with Benes, himself refusing to condone capitulation.

Jan Masaryk, Czech minister to London, telegraphed to Prague shortly after the cabinet had reached its decision. He told them that the British opinion was nearing in favor of checking Hitler after all.

Political pressure by the leaders of all parties compelled the government to reconsideration.

Twenty leaders of factions represented in Parliament were reported to have turned down acceptance of Hitler's demand, declaring the cabinet action unconstitutional.

The demand, therefore is now for immediate recalling of Parliament, dissolved by the President several days ago. In the meantime, Hitler may attack, but if he does so, undertakes circumstances. The Czechs are still hoping France and England will come to their aid. The Czechs may consider they can save their national existence only if Hitler does so attack.

JERUSALEM, Sept. 21—Around the city of Jerusalem there reigns a sacred quiet. It is the most silent city in the world at night. There are neither the noises of a city nor the sounds of a countryside. No street cars, nor automobiles, not even the footsteps of men disturb the silence after midnight, and only the far-off crowing of a cock may be heard towards dawn.

S. LANGHORNE FIRE CO. MAY SELL BUILDING

Interest in Social Events Has Lagged, and Hall Now Not Necessary

WILL KEEP EQUIPMENT

SOUTH LANGHORNE, Sept. 21—Among the subjects discussed at a recent meeting of the South Langhorne Fire Company was the possibility of selling the fire house and procuring smaller quarters for the fire equipment until a greater interest is shown in the activities of the company.

The company has a large building, suitable for social activities of a varied nature, but for some time interest in these matters has lagged considerably, and the greater part of the building has been put to little use.

The equipment has been kept in good condition, as has also the building, and there is prompt and willing service whenever the occasion arises for the need of the company.

The suggestion concerning the selling of the present quarters was made by Charles Q'Brien, who stated that he was active in the company at the time of the building of the fire house in 1917, and for many years that followed. He said to equip the place for entertainments it would have to be fitted with emergency lights. President Joseph Keating, who presided at the session, offered to write the proper authorities in Harrisburg, and learn the exact requirements. Secretary Joseph Lukens, who is an electrician, offered to donate the work of installing the equipment, if the company procured the material. H. J. Marks told of some of the legal requirements regarding emergency lights.

Mr. Marks complimented the company on the very successful picnic recently held. Mr. Keating, chairman of the picnic committee, reported net proceeds of about $200.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

The Second Failure

Washington, Sept. 20.

"lack the liberal point of view," not unnaturally have obscured a phase of the New Deal Administration as significant as it is important—to wit, the flat failure of the new farm program.

ACTUALLY, the inexorable laws of supply and demand have as completely collapsed the latest effort to regiment, regulate and control agriculture as the Supreme Court, interpreting the laws of the land, collapsed the first effort when, two years ago, it invalidated the AAA. This second great failure is not a thing to which Administration spokesmen call attention. Nor is it one they will admit publicly. So far as they can it will be covered up under the propaganda cloak for some vague, new program levying additional taxes, providing for increased subsidies and even greater control, to be submitted to Congress at the coming session.

THE SIMPLE FACT is that the plan has not worked. With all the power that seemed possible; with every everything that could be thought of in an act so comprehensive and complicated that almost anything could be done under it and no man could, or at any rate did, intelligently explain it—with all that, plus four years' experience in regulatory efforts, the scheme cannot be made to operate effectively. That has now become completely clear and it certainly is no surprise to those who at the time of its passage made an effort

ADMITS TO DRINKING, BUT DENIES HE DROVE CAR WHILE DRUNK

Marvin T. Powell, Falls Twp., Explains How He Sat In Car Because of Rain

DRANK 85-CENT GIN

States He Never Drove The Car After Touching The Gin

DOYLESTOWN, Sept. 21—All the qualifications of a tipsy driver were admitted by a defendant in criminal court Monday afternoon, with the exception that he did not drive his car while drunk. A jury acquitted the defendant, Marvin T. Powell, of Falls township, after he explained that his automobile ran off the highway on the Bristol pike on the night of May 26 during a heavy rain storm and ran into a field.

Powell, who is employed by the King Farms Company as a night tractor mechanic, testified that it started to rain very hard about the time of the accident and that he tried to get the car out of the field and the more he tried the deeper it would sink in the mud.

The defendant said that he had a pint of eighty-five cent gin in the front of his car, and that he decided to take a drink and wait for the rain to stop. The rain continued and Powell continued to drink until he had emptied the bottle of gin.

"Then I was drunk. I admit it. Your Honor," Powell testified. "But I never drove my car after I had touched the gin," he added.

The Pennsylvania Motor Police from the Oxford Valley sub-station on patrol, noticed the Powell car in the field. They testified that when they arrived at the car Powell was making an effort to get the car out and that the wheels were spinning.

The police testified that Powell became quite unruly when arrested and that one officer had to "use a bit of rough-house" on the defendant to get him into his car to take him to the office of Dr. Theodore Cohen, Morrisville. The officer denied that he kicked Powell in the stomach, as Powell had testified.

Dr. Cohen testified that when he ex-

Rev. Charles Ellis Dies; Native of Newtown

NEWTOWN, Sept. 21—Rev. Charles George Ellis, Ph. D. died at his home in Margareville, N. Y., Monday morning. He was stricken with an asthmatic condition while traveling with his son in England and Scotland early last summer, and this developed into heart trouble. He suffered a severe attack after his return in July and on Saturday he had another attack, from which he failed to rally.

A native of this borough, he was born on September 23, 1865, the son of the late Winfield Scott Ellis, and Francanna Gilton Ellis. After attending the Newtown public school he clerked for some time in the grocery store of the late John M. Stapler. He learned the carpenter trade with his father, but he gave this up to study for the ministry.

After attending the Doylestown Seminary he was graduated from Lafayette College, Easton, and the Union Theological Seminary, New York. While pursuing his studies he spent one summer in organizing Sunday schools in Iowa, and another in the service of the Presbyterian Church at Georgetown, Del. He later supplied the Presbyterian church at Margareville, where he met Miss Mary Lewis Grant, daughter of the late John and Fanny Jane O'Conner Grant, whom he married on October 11, 1894.

Dr. Ellis was subsequently pastor of the Presbyterian church in Northport, L. I., for several years. He resigned to become pastor of the Roundout Presbyterian Church, Kingston, N. Y., where he served for 30 years, until his retirement a few years ago, when he took up residence in Margareville, in the Catskill Mountains. However, the call of the ministry was still strong with him and he took up mission work at two small churches several miles from his home, which he served each Sunday for

THE SMITHSONIAN

Ninety years ago there came into being by creation of an act of Congress the Smithsonian Institution at Washington, today one of the best-known agencies in the world for "the increase and diffusion of knowledge among man," as its founder expressed it.

The man who founded it was an Englishman, who called himself James Smithson, but is believed to have been the illegitimate son of an English duke, and never had visited America. His bequest to this country, which is thought to have been founded on pique over the lack of recognition by his noble relatives. The bequest was, in round figures, about $500,000 and reached the institution by reversionary interest after the death of a nephew. Smithson's body was brought to the United States in 1904 from the place in which he died, Genoa, Italy, and now rests in the institution he began.

Joseph Henry, one of the early founders of the telegraph and a scientist of high attainments, was the institution's first head. Under him James Renwick designed the first building, now an integer of the present group of the National Museum, which is one of the show places at Washington. But the name of the Smithsonian Institution permanently survives. It is still "diffusing knowledge" as its original founder desired, and its research library is known all over the world through its international exchange of documents and publications. In fact, it is so widely known that the institution itself is much more familiar than its original reason for being.

One has in imagination to transport one's self back to the American civilization of ninety years ago to realize from what comparatively obscure beginnings have arisen the magnificent fruition of today.

In a row over parking lights, six Washington policemen were needed to quell one regular of the United States Army. If war must rear its ugly head, this is a comfort.

"Half the people don't know how the other half live," said the philosopher, but that was before the other half began to live on the Government.

and Powell, he was very much under the influence of intoxicating liquor. Powell testified that he had started to work the night of May 26, looking over the tractors on the King Farms, but quit, with permission of his boss, after it started to rain. He said that he then started home and that was when his car ran off the highway, early in the evening, he said.

The police testified that they had passed the spot where Powell's car was stuck fifteen minutes before they arrested him and at that time saw no car there.

On the witness stand, Private Nighan, one of the officers making the arrest, was not clear as to the make of car that Powell was driving. When questioned by Powell's attorney, J.

Lawrence Grim, of Morrisville, Nighan was considerably confused about the make of Powell's car and whether it had one or two seats.

"Well, if you are confused about the make of car the jury has the right to believe that you are confused about other testimony you have given here," Mr. Grim said.

The officer also testified in rebuttal that he had searched the Powell car for a bottle and that he had also searched in the vicinity of the car with a flashlight, for a distance of 50 feet, looking for a bottle, but could not find one.

"Do you mean to say that you usually search a car for bottles and that you search the surrounding territory for bottles when making an arrest in this kind of a case?" Mr. Grim asked Private Nighan.

"Yes, I do; that is the customary procedure in this kind of a case; that's my job as a policeman," the officer answered.

Attorney Grim, at the completion of the testimony, made a motion to enter a demurrer to the whole case. Judge Keller overruled the motion, after District Attorney Edward G. Blester replied that it was the Commonwealth's contention that plenty of evidence had been produced to sustain a conviction of driving while drunk, under the law.

The jury deliberated but a short time and acquitted Powell, but placed the costs on him.

George Penzige, of Trenton, went on trial before Judge Keller on a charge of driving while drunk in Pineville at 4 a. m. June 11.

Charles Dinelocker, of Pineville, testified that he and his wife were awakened by the noise of an automobile starter and saw a car against a tree in his front yard. Two men were trying to get the car out of the mud. Dinelocker testified that he saw the defendant talking to the Motor Police about 20 minutes afterward and that Penzige "did not seem drunk." The defendant did not stagger, Dinelocker testified under cross-examination conducted by defense counsel, Arthur M. Eastburn, Doylestown.

Each was trying to tell the other who was driving the car, Dinelocker testified in reference to two men being in the car. The witness said the front of the car was badly damaged and could not be moved.

Private Phillips, of the Doylestown sub-station of Motor Police, testified that he and Private Beckhardt arrived at the scene at 4:45 a. m. and found a man by the name of Charles Jefferson Kennedy, Newtown, seated in the car. Kennedy denied that he was the driver. Penzige then walked out from behind the car and Private Phillips said that the defendant then told him that he was not the driver either, and that both men were "arguing who operated the car."

"Both men had the odor of alcohol on their breath, and I believe that the defendant was under the influence of liquor," Private Phillips testified.

In his opening to the jury before any witnesses were called, District Attorney Blester remarked that the Commonwealth would not be able to show that the defendant was "very much under the influence of intoxicating liquor."

Private Phillips testified that he noticed no staggering gait when the defendant walked. He also stated that he found the car was owned by the other man, Kennedy. The officer said that he was also of the opinion that the defendant was drunk because he had tried to move the car.

"I would say the defendant was under a medium degree of liquor; his conduct was perfect," Private Phillips testified. Private Beckhardt testified that in his opinion the defendant was drunk.

"He probably knew what he was doing but didn't care what he was doing," Beckhardt testified.

"How long have you been on the Penna. Motor Police force?" Attorney Eastburn asked. "Since last January," Beckhardt replied.

Dr. John N. Rich, Doylestown, who examined Penzige about 5 a. m. testified that the defendant showed no evidence of lack of control of his gait in his office and that he had only a slight odor of alcohol on his breath. Dr. Rich said the defendant had poor vision and enough wax in his ears to prevent him hearing the crack of a gun.

"The defendant really had no evidence of acute alcoholism, and was not under the influence of liquor," Dr. Rich testified.

Judge Keller directed a verdict of not guilty and placed the costs on the county.

Sacred Quiet Reigns Around Jerusalem

There are no night resorts, no night clubs or cabarets. It is the only city in all the Orient without a trace of public vice. Its Holy character is kept by Moslem, Jew and Christian.

Yet Jerusalem is the capital of the most murderous country in the world today, and during the long stillness of the night at the borders of each Jewish suburb armed volunteers stand watch in the regular period of sentries on duty during war. Five hundred Jews are ready to take their stations at the alarm. Without them no Jewish family could sleep, for the word has gone around that the Arabs, fed on the success of their Terror, intend to raid the Holy City itself.

To deal one great smashing blow at British prestige and Jewish security, the Arab bandits, it is rumored and by some believed, plan to assault Jerusalem. Several hundred of them, in the garb of Fellahin, peasants, would enter the city by twos and threes, and at a given signal attack, not merely Jewish homes, but the Jewish Agency's great citadel, the King David Hotel, the government offices. Shoot, kill, burn, rapidly then flee.

That is a nightmare not talked of often.

Millions of dollars have been paid into the State Treasury by employers for this purpose, but only a portion of it has thus far been turned over to the unemployed men and women of Pennsylvania to whom it belongs.

above a whisper, but present in the backs of the minds, of those who, as all the Jews in Palestine, remember that more than 350 Jews have been killed in the last two years and 1,000 wounded by Arab bandits.

"Why?" I asked Ragheb Bey al Nashashibi, "is such a Terror possible?"

"Have you ever been out at night in Jerusalem; and did you ever see a British policeman or any policeman on the streets after midnight?" returned the handsome old Arab leader as he sat drinking Turkish coffee with me in the King David Hotel. "If you go out tonight and you see a policeman I want you to go to a telephone and call me and I will say 'Ragheb is wrong.'"

That night I set out to test the statement of the one great Arab politician who still defies the power of the Mufti of Jerusalem, the exiled Haj Amin al Hussein, Boss of the Terror.

After midnight I walked with an Englishman through the old Arab city. The moonlight made the cavernous tunnels of the sleeping bazaars bright at the entrances and pitchblack within. By day they burst with life, but now they were deserted as a graveyard. A few stray cats crept noiselessly across our path. Now and then an Arab sleeping in a doorway raised his head to peer at the unaccustomed passerby. But not one policeman did we see in an hour's wandering through Jerusalem.

Jews in Jerusalem are protected by numbers. Thousands of Jews on the land go to bed each night thinking of the fate that befell the tiny settlement of Kiryath-Harosheth. I visited this poverty-stricken colony in the Valley of Jezreel, not far from Haifa. In it live for the most part Haifa workers, and one of them was Shmuel Guterman, 35, with his wife, Lotte, 30, and their little daughter Bella, 2 years old.

Shmuel, a baker, who had come from Rumania three years before, had worked so hard and saved so much of his meager earnings that he was able to buy a one room house on a tiny plot of land. All week Shmuel worked in Haifa and on Fridays and Saturdays at home he served without pay as one of the colony's nightwatchmen.

On one night off he was asleep, and his wife slept next him with their baby in her arms. Just before midnight a group of Arabs crept to the door of the little Shmuel house, put their rifles next the heads of the sleeping parents and the baby, fired, then with knives cut the throats of all three.

They then set fire to the house, and ran to the next one where Mrs. Regina Spigler, 32, her son Jacob, 11, and her daughter Clara, 5, were sleeping. Afraid to attack even a sleeping woman without first shooting, they shot the mother and the son, but while they were cutting the mother's throat the son staggered away into the yard, where he fell dead. They fired at the five year old girl, but missed her. Miraculously she escaped, hid in the tomato patch back of the house and was saved.

This sort of thing reads dully in a police report, but it makes you shiver when you stand by the graves.

Had the bandits possessed the courage commonly ascribed to the Arab of fiction they might have exterminated the whole settlement of seventy families, by knifing them in their beds. They chose the surer method of shooting first, arousing the watchman, who drove them off.

I took a picture of the three graves of the Shmuel family, dug in the burned out ruins of his house. The mother and child next door were buried in the back yard. Since then the Jewish Agency has provided 1500 yards of barbed wire to help protect the settlement. The government has refused to provide more than the one paid policeman it had when the murders took place.

The killing of defenceless women and children has become a typical characteristic of the Arab Terror. Little Rachel Raznik, 13, was sitting in a hut belonging to her sister in the Gan Hashomron settlement when two Arabs, first peering in to see that she was alone, shot her in the stomach.

Eight young Jewish girl laborers started home from work in a cart near Rehovoth, accompanied by two Arab laborers. Another Arab pulled up on a bicycle whispered to the Arab laborers, who alighted. A little further on an Arab leaning against a gate suddenly whipped out his revolver and fired two shots. One of them struck a sixteen year old girl Rivka Lehrer, in the back, and killed her instantly.

Even more impressive is the manner in which the entire family of Benjamin Babayew, 32, his wife Zivia 28, and their seven year old daughter were wiped out in less than a minute. They were bicycling, Benjamin on one bicycle with his daughter on the handlebars, and his wife on another along the Shabbat road at mid-afternoon on the Sabbath. Arabs from an orange field fired one shot. It struck the father in the head, killing him instantly. As he fell, they shot the child in the stomach. The mother lost control of her bicycle and fell to the ground. The Arabs came out of the grove, took careful aim and shot her through the head.

All the murders herewith described have taken place within the last two months. They are not exceptional, but daily events. They illustrate the degree to which the British government has failed in the fundamental duty of government, to protect the lives of its citizens.

What effect has the Terror had upon the Jews? Are they giving in? Do they show signs of quitting? A visit to their front line on the frontier, deep within the Arab country, will give the answer.

to understand what it was all about.

AS YET the public generally is not aware of the failure because its attention has been diverted by other more colorful matters. But the Department of Agriculture, headed by Mr. Henry Wallace, is aware of it and may be said to be silently suffering no little pain as a result of the knowledge. It is not too much to say that they are in rather a desperate frame of mind on the subject, one evidence of which is the almost feverish attempt of Mr. Wallace to buy up surplus crops and distribute food to families who already are being taken care of by the relief organization. Other evidence is in the character of the various unostentatious announcements emanating from the department in the last few weeks. As they ruthlessly regard prices for farm products the thinking farmers of the country feel that the plan has flopped and there is beginning to be considerable resentment more or less openly manifested.

OF COURSE, Mr. Roosevelt knows the facts, too. Not long ago Mr. Wallace had a long private talk with him—the first in quite a while—at Hyde Park. Mr. Wallace is far too conscientious and honest a man to have concealed the true facts from his Chief and he is much too clear-headed not to be greatly worried by the state of affairs. As a matter of fact, the figures themselves tell the story of the failure. The prices of farm products generally are today lower than they were before the act went into effect—wheat, corn and cotton are all down. As Mr. Mark Sullivan points out, the index price for all grain crops today is 77 whereas in October, 1933, when Mr. Roosevelt first proclaimed his purpose to raise farm prices by legislation, the index figure was 78.

IN THE FACE of this, it is not easy to see how the statement that the farm program has failed can be contradicted. The first failure, of course, was laid to the Supreme Court; for the second failure there seems no alibi at all. To the ordinary man this would now seem the time for Mr. Roosevelt to acknowledge error and retreat from a course clearly proven futile. But that is the one thing that will not be done. The only other alternative is to push blindly along in the same direction; to keep up the pretense that, given time, the idea is bound to work; that what is needed is "additional legislation" and more money; to reaffirm the 1933 promises to the farmer that "if we cannot raise prices one way we will another. Do it we will."

SO, AT THE next session there will be another farm program. No one knows what it will be, but then no one knew very much about the present one until it made its bewildering appearance. In their hearts, the more intelligent of the economic planners in Washington know now there is no legislative remedy for the situation, but that will not prevent them from cooking up another proposal which is sure to be more expensive, more complicated and more authoritarian. Once started in that direction, the only alternative to a confession of failure is to go on, but the high-minded among the administrators—like Mr. Wallace—must be desperately unhappy. This business of trying to be God is an awful strain.

The action is swift and gay, and concerns a Parisian artist, Novarro, who paints a daring masterpiece of the girl of his dreams, and suddenly finds her in real life in the person of Marian Marsh, an American heiress. Everyone tries to get the painting back from the gallery—Novarro because its daringness reflects on his newly found sweetheart, Tombes because it reflects on his daughter, Rutherford because he is engaged to Miss Marsh, etc. But the painting has been sold to an American gallery, and all board the ship that is carrying the focal point of the action to the U. that many social affairs could be conducted by the company at a small cost.

It was remarked by several old-time members that whenever in the past special functions have been conducted by the company, it has fallen upon a very few to do practically all the work, and they urged that a more general interest be taken on the part of all members in any future activities.

Robert Keim, of the house committee, said a number of changes could be made at slight expense, and that a more complete report will be made at the next meeting.

Mr. Marks told of his belief that extensive publicity, particularly newspaper advertising, is absolutely essential to put across any local project such as the fire company might undertake.

The company is experiencing a new lease of life with the influx of several new members, largely through the cooperation of the Associated Business Men of South Langhorne.

At the August meeting the following enrolled: Robert Campbell, John

JENKINTOWN TOPS BENSALEM ELEVEN IN PRACTICE GAME

Bensalem's Main Weakness Is Shown To Be In The Line

LOSE CONTEST BY 6 TO 0

Owls Make Fair Showing In The Backfield; Men
Are Light

CORNWELLS HEIGHTS, Sept. 21—Bensalem's main weakness showed up very conspicuous as the Owls were nosed out by Jenkintown in a practice scrimmage on the Owls' field, yesterday, 6-0.

It was the line where coach George Reimer is experimenting that was the weak spot. Almost the entire line of last year's team was wiped out via graduation, leaving a forward wall of inexperienced raw material to fill in six out of seven vacancies. Thus it was with such a line that Bensalem faced Jenkintown's very much improved varsity eleven of 1938. And as a result, the Owls fared rather poorly on the defense.

As a matter of fact, had it not been for the secondary backing up on most of the plays, the visitors would have rolled up a much higher score than they did in the few minutes of play. The tackles and guards were especially weak on both the defense and offense which means plenty of work and more experimenting for the boys of coach Reimer the balance of this week and all of next before their opening tilt with Upper Merion on Saturday, October 1.

In the backfield, however, the Owls looked pretty fair on the whole and in consideration of the weather and their light men. Their running plays netted them very few yards, but their aerial attack clicked on several occasions with huge gains resulting especially in the closing minutes of the game when the Owls were making an offensive drive down the field. These passes were tossed by Capt. Jack Scarborough with Bob White on the receiving end.

Jenkintown, on the other hand, showed much more fighting spirit this season over last year and the boys were not only more aggressive, but they showed signs of clicking on all four cylinders at times. Nevertheless, there is still much room for improvement along all lines for them to before they open their 1938 campaign against Souderton, Saturday, September 23.

But in spite of that coach "Bill" Dougherty came out with the surprise statement that he expects his team to be "in the money" among the Bux-Mont conference foes this coming campaign. Last year the Red Devils finished fifth in the final standings but Bill expects them to finish in the first three this year. Of course, in making this unusual prediction regarding to his team, which is extremely contrary to his usual method of prognostication for his grid outfit, he leaves his chin open for a beating should he miss the mark at the close of the campaign.

Yesterday the boys played in a continual downpour of rain which hindered the playing of both sides no little but since the rain waited today until after the game got under way, there was no postponing it like Monday.

After the varsity squads, and the second, third and fourth teams ran through their plays in scrimmage, the boys lined up for about a half an hour of regular "game" scrimmage. In the practice scrimmage, each team ran the ball for four consecutive downs and kicked on the fifth in spite of what may have happened in between, whether they lost the ball on a fumble, intercepted pass, or yardage or whether they made a first down, they held the ball until the fifth down when they kicked.

It was in the "game" that Jenkintown pushed over the lone touchdown of the afternoon, when after receiving an out of bound punt, they drove down the field to within the Owls' 100 yard line where they made a first down.

However, the Owls' knuckled down and held the visitors. But after kicking out of danger, the Owls were again pressed by coach Bill Dougherty's boys on a series of end runs and line plays.

Hall carried the pleskin over into the end zone from the Owls' three yard line on an off tackle play. The extra point, via a pass failed.

Gorham Getchell, big six foot end, and Still in the line performed outstandingly for the visitors, while both Lange and Hall stood out for them in the backfield. For the Owls, Jack Scarborough, Bob Whyte, and Al Despo starred in the Blue and White in the backfield, while Nick Marini did likewise in the line for Bensalem.

Arrangements for Bensalem to return the practice session at Jenkintown next week could not be reached mutually so that scrimmage has been cancelled for this year.

Judge James Says Democrats Are Trying To Buy Votes

He declared the Earle Administration repealed laws at the last session of the Legislature which would have sent persons guilty of coercion to jail.

Such tactics, he added, are those of desperation and means but one thing "that the Earle Administration has seen the handwriting on the wall; that it realizes the people of Pennsylvania has tried it in the balance and found it wanting."

"The Little New Dealers," he asserted, "are making a desperate gamble on trying to beat the men and women of this State into line. If they know these people as well as I do they wouldn't make that mistake."

Resentment against the Democratic tactics not only exists among the needy, said the jurist, but those who paid taxes to "help relieve suffering."

"Neither group," he continued, "likes such political tactics and if I know the mind of either group they are going to stop it."

Advising the needy on methods of combating the coercive tactics, the jurist told them not to fight openly with the bosses and risk losing food and shelter, but to "bend to the wind and wait for Election Day when you will have a chance to vote alone with your conscience."

"And then," he declared, "is when you can vote that sort of politics and coercion forever out of Pennsylvania's life."

"If we are to be happy in Pennsylvania," he asserted, "we can't have one of our children sick and distressed. You know that you can't have happiness in your own family if one of the children is ill."

He charged the Earle Administration of using a policeman's club on industry; that every time industry "sticks its head up, another tax, another regulation and more red tape are imposed upon it."

Most of the State Administration's ideas, he contended, are copied from the "shore of the Potomac" and are "part and parcel" of planned ideas "which came from Russia, Germany and Italy."

"We don't want any Bolshevism, Hitlerism or Fascism in America," he said. "We want good old-fashioned Americanism, not autocratic methods from Europe."

NEW YORK—(INS)—Americans spend $5,000,000 annually for bridge lessons according to a survey, which says that this amount represents $1,000 a year for each of the estimated 5,000 instructors in the country.

Thirteen tests of the water made during the past month were all satisfactory, according to a report by Councilman Charles G. Young. Young said all delinquent metered bills were paid and that 15,042,460 gallons of water were pumped last month. This was a daily average of 485,240 gallons.

A request by the State Highway Department for the adoption of an order to place a stop-street sign at the corner of North Delmor Avenue and Trenton Avenue, was turned down by council. Several members said it would be more dangerous there with a stop sign because of the grade of Delmor Avenue. This is the second time the State has requested permission to place a stop sign at this corner.

The matter of purchasing the river front and part of the island which is owned by the Delaware River Improvement Company, to be used with that portion known as a baseball grounds, as a public park, was discussed. Borough officials will negotiate with the owners and, if the price is right, will acquire it. The money to be used is from the bequest of the late H. F. Williamson, of Lancaster, who left a sum for the establishment of a Williamson Park here.
